"Bill" Weightman's feat of finishing third in the Vanderbilt Cup race the other day is the first time that any other than a professional racing driver has been one, two, three in the automobile classic since the days of David Bruce Brown and Spencer Wishart, both of whom have since been killed. These two followed automobile racing not for the money to be won but purely from a sporting standpoint, the same as Weightman is doing. They, as has Weightman, had ample means and drove for the fun of it. Harry Duckett, the manager of the Weightman racing team is a Washingtonian.

There has been a movement on foot for a year or longer to make one day at the two national automobile shows a dealers' day. On this day admission would be only by a special dealers' ticket and it would give the factory representatives an opportunity to go into the cars and the possibilities from a sales standpoint with men whom they knew were dealers and with many of whom they perhaps would not have an opportunity to come in contact with otherwise. The main objection seems to be that the buying public would be excluded and thus perhaps some prospective sales lost. With new models coming out now in mid-year as many of them have been, it hardly seems a solid argument for the majority of the buying public have already seen the cars on their dealers' floors, and the vast throng that visits the national show goes largely out of curiosity. A great many dealers on the other hand make the trip to either New York or Chicago for the purpose of looking over the field and perhaps trying to secure another line that will be more advantageous to them.
